

Introduction to Political Science

The study of politics today is a dramatic area of scholarly activity that opens and gives a wide range of perspectives and methods as well. The aim of this course is to give a basic knowledge about political science for the students or those who are interested in the field of behavioral sciences with the emphasis on politics. The lessons apply all elementary terms from political science to current public and state's realities, although a wide political arrangements and regimes exist among the different cultures of the world. The lecturer also wants to introduce how political scientists try to approach or clarify many important terms in different views.